Sex Offender Community Notification: A Review of Laws in 32 States

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Community notification refers to the distribution of information regarding released sex offenders to citizens and community organizations. This report analyzes the 32 states with legislation authorizing some form of notification, or access to information, on registered sex offenders. The states can be organized into the following categories:

- Broad community notification. This category includes states authorizing the broad release of sex offender information to the public. This type of notification is authorized in 13 states.
- Notification to organizations and individuals at risk. In this version of notification, information is released based on the need to protect an individual or vulnerable organization from a specific offender. Laws allowing this type of notification exist in 8 states.
- Access to registration information. The 11 states in this category allow access by citizens or organizations to sex offender information through local law enforcement.

Almost two-thirds of the states that authorize notification have enacted guidelines and procedures for notification into state law. A few states require specific Community Notification Guidelines Committees to establish procedures. These procedures cover the type of offenders subject to notification, how and what information is disseminated, and who is notified. The remaining one-third states' statutes authorizing notification allow broad discretion to public officials in their decision-making.

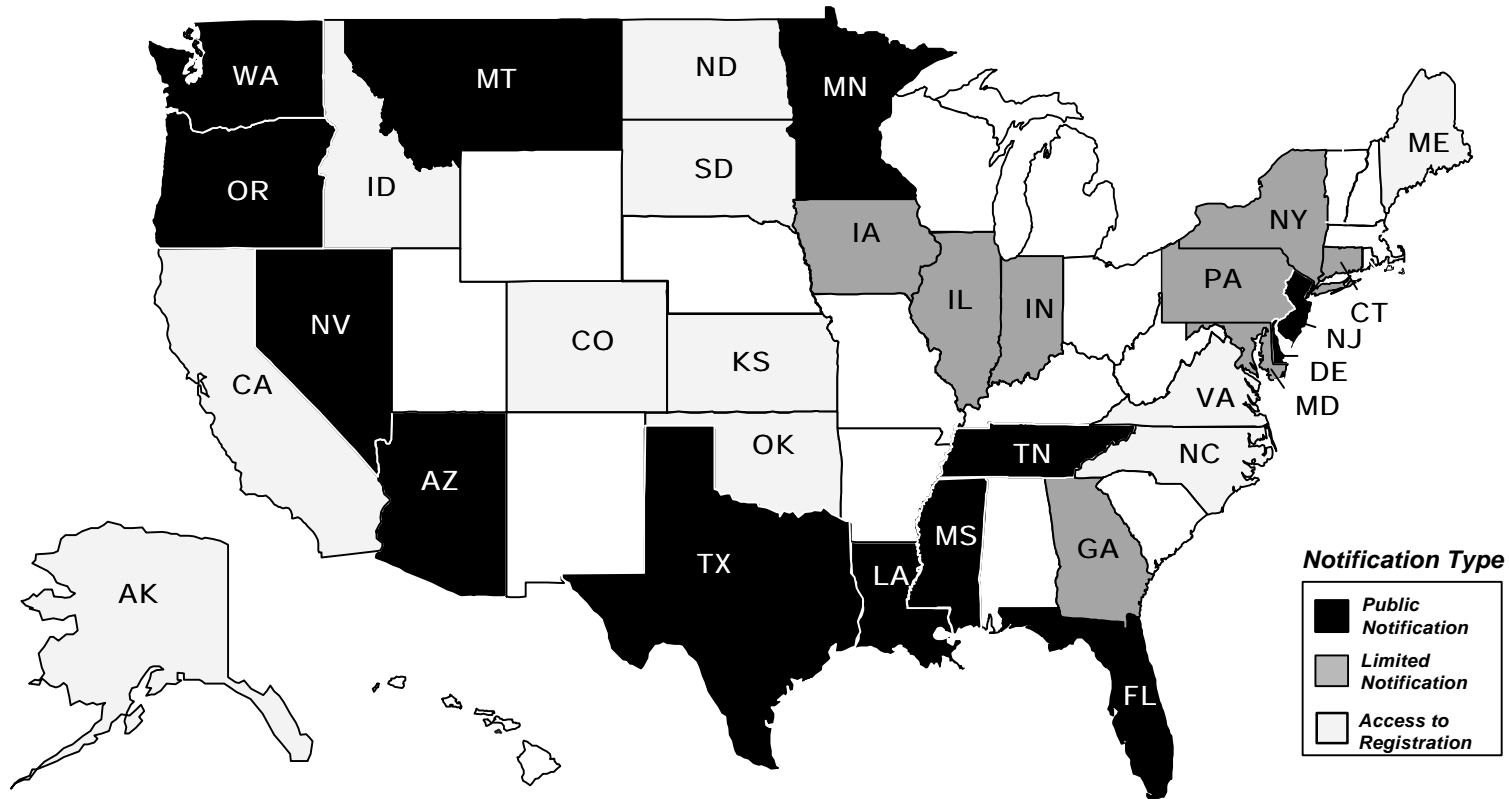

Community notification has been subject to challenges on constitutional grounds, most frequently based on the argument that notification represents additional punishment. Injunctions, or temporary restraining orders, are in place in Alaska, New Jersey, and New York and are under appeal. In Washington State, an injunction is in effect for specific individuals and is also being appealed.

The analysis of state statutes reveals the following:

- Generally, notification is reserved for those offenders assessed as high risk or those convicted of offenses against children.

- Approaches and methods for notification vary, with typical methods being press releases, flyers, ads in newspapers, and direct mailings.
- The notification typically includes, name, description or photo, address or approximate address, description of crime, and age of the victim.
- Some states use specific risk assessment instruments to determine an offender's risk of re-offending, and whether an offender should be subject to notification.
- State organizations often develop rules and procedures for carrying out community notification, with local organizations generally responsible for carrying out the actual notification.
- States that maintain registries locate them with a state agency. Typically, citizens have access, however a few states only allow access to organizations dealing with children.

32 States Have Sex Offender Community Notification Laws or Allow Access to Sex Offender Registration Information

WSIPP MARCH 1996

The following states do not have sex offender community notification laws and do not allow access to registration records: AL, AR, HI, KY, MA, MI, MO, NE, NH, NM, OH, RI, SC, UT, VT, WI, WV, WY

BACKGROUND

The term community notification refers to the distribution of information regarding released sex offenders to citizens and community organizations. In some states, citizens are notified about the release of all sex offenders from incarceration. In other states, community notification is authorized only when it is deemed necessary to protect the public from a specific offender being released from incarceration. In these instances, the offender may be classified as a habitual or predatory sex offender, and someone who has shown little ability to reform.

As part of federal legislation, title XVII of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 requires states to create registries of offenders convicted of crimes against children or sexually violent offenses. This Act also encourages states to authorize the release of relevant registration information to the public, when necessary for the public's protection. States that do not comply with this Act's provisions can be penalized by ten percent of funds normally received under section 506 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968.

Sex offender registration laws have existed for several years; California has the nation's oldest law, enacted in 1944. Community notification laws, however, were initiated in the 1990s. The first community notification law was a provision of Washington State's Community Protection Act of 1990. Washington's community notification law authorizes local law enforcement agencies to disseminate information to the public regarding convicted sex offenders who reside in the community. Many states have followed Washington's lead by enacting community notification laws; some laws are modeled after Washington's approach and some take new approaches.

ORGANIZATION

This report provides a detailed analysis of state statutes covering community notification.¹ Thirty-two states are included in this report; statutes vary in form and function. For this reason, we have organized the analyses into three categories, based on form of community notification.

1. Broad community notification. This category includes states which authorize the broad release of information regarding released sex offenders to the public.

¹ Information was collected from February to April 1996, from states known to have sex offender community notification laws. Information was collected through telephone interviews, fax transmissions, and mailings. Informants were administrators, legislative research staff, legal counsel, or law enforcement officials, as appropriate.

Thirteen states provide this type of notification.² The process for determining which offenders should be subject to notification differs from state to state.

2. Notification to organizations and individuals at risk. This version of notification law is more limited, with release of information based on the need to protect an individual or vulnerable organizations from a specific sex offender.

An additional eight states provide this type of notification.³ Organizations typically notified are: child care facilities, religious organizations, public and private schools, and other entities that deal with children. Individuals at risk are generally determined by local law enforcement officials.

3. Access to registration information. States in this category allow access, by citizens or community organizations, to sex offender information through their county sheriff or local police department.

Eleven states allow some access to sex offender registration information.⁴ In most states, local law enforcement officials maintain a registry of sex offenders residing within their jurisdiction. Some are open to public inspection, others are open only to citizens at risk from a specific offender, and still others are open only to community organizations such as schools, licensed child care facilities, and religious organizations.

States That Issue Broad Community Notification

Of the thirteen states that issue broad community notification, four issue notifications for all sex offenders convicted of specific offenses: Arizona, Delaware, Louisiana, and Texas. Arizona authorizes mandatory community notification for all offenders convicted of sexual conduct with a minor under the age of 15, or sexual assault with a deadly weapon. Delaware issues community notification for all child sex offenders. Louisiana and Texas issue community notification for all registered sex offenders.

The remaining nine states⁵ issue notifications regarding released sex offenders determined to pose a threat. These states have varying approaches for determining threat. In Florida and Montana, the circuit or district court determines which offenders are subject to community notification.

Washington's law authorizes local law enforcement officials to distribute information to the public about dangerous sex offenders. The state leaves decision-making on notification, including how to assess risk and who to notify, in the discretion of the public agency, typically law enforcement. Most law enforcement jurisdictions in the state follow guidelines

for notification based on the offender's risk to re-offend.⁶ These guidelines establish three levels of notification:

Level I:

Low Risk to re-offend, information may be shared with other law enforcement agencies.

Level II:

Moderate Risk to re-offend, includes activities above, but in addition, schools, neighbors and community groups may be notified of an offender's release.

Level III:

High Risk to re-offend, in addition to the actions above, press releases and flyers may be issued.

Several states follow Washington's three-tiered approach. Nevada, New Jersey, and Minnesota (Arizona has legislation pending) are examples of this approach.

States That Issue Notification to Organizations and Individuals at Risk

These states issue notifications to individuals who may encounter the offender, and/or to organizations dealing with children. Connecticut and Illinois release information when it is deemed necessary to protect a person from a specific offender. Local law enforcement agencies decide when the release of information is necessary. The Illinois Department of State Police, or local law enforcement agencies, also release information to schools and child care facilities.

New York releases information dependent upon an offender's level of risk. A three-tier risk assessment instrument (similar to Washington's) is used to determine the notification process, and information on offenders assessed as Level II and III may be released.

Georgia, Indiana, Maryland, and Pennsylvania issue notifications to organizations dealing with children. Indiana notifies all school corporations, all nonpublic schools, state agencies that license individuals working with children, state personnel department, and licensed child care facilities. In Maryland, local law enforcement may notify community and religious organizations, and others that work with children, of a registration statement, if necessary for public protection.

States That Allow Access to Registration Information

Nine states allow the public or members of community organizations to view sex offender registration information.⁷ These states allow this type of access through law enforcement offices. California maintains a "900" phone line, which citizens may call to inquire whether a specific individual is a registered sex offender (New York has implemented a similar system). Colorado and North Dakota release registration information when deemed necessary for public protection and requester demonstrates a need to know.

Two states, Oklahoma and Virginia, limit access exclusively to schools and agencies dealing with children.

LITIGATION

Challenges to community notification laws have occurred in several states. These challenges are typically based on the argument that notification is punitive in character, and these statutes violate the ex post facto clause in the constitution.

At the time of this report, challenges were under court consideration in Alaska, New Jersey, and New York. In Alaska, the challenge concerns applicability of the statute for offenders who committed offenses prior to the statute's effective date.⁸ In July 1995, the New Jersey Supreme Court upheld that state's notification statute, saying it was constitutional as long as sex offenders facing notification had a chance to question it before a judge.⁹ Currently, a challenge to New Jersey's statute has resulted in an injunction, barring notification.

In Washington State, a 1994 Supreme Court ruling upheld the constitutionality of the sex offender registration statute and set the following parameters for notification:

- Who should be the subject of notification?

A disclosing agency or official:

*"must have some evidence of an offender's future dangerousness, likelihood of re-offense, or threat to the community, to justify disclosure to the public in a given case. This statutory limit ensures that disclosure occurs to prevent future harm, not to punish past offenses."*¹⁰

- What should be disclosed to the community?

In determining what information to disclose, the supreme court set the standard as "relevant and necessary."

"This standard imposes an obligation to release registrant information reasonably necessary to counteract the danger created by the particular offender . An agency must disclose only that information relevant to and necessary for counteracting the offender's dangerousness.”¹¹

- Who in the community should be notified?

The focus of notification must “rationally [relate] to the furtherance” of the goals of public safety and the effective operation of government.¹²

“Accordingly, the geographic scope of dissemination must relate to the threat posed by the registered offender. Depending on the particular methods of an offender, an agency might decide to limit disclosure only to the surrounding neighborhood, or to schools and day care centers, or, in cases of immediate or imminent risk of harm, the public at large. The scope of disclosure must relate to the scope of danger.”¹³

Currently, U.S. District Courts are considering injunctions in Washington cases disallowing notification on specific individuals.¹⁴ Again, these challenges are based on the notion of additional punishment and argue that the requirement of notification should not apply to offenders convicted before the law was enacted.

TABLE OVERVIEW

This report contains four tables, each containing information regarding state statutes. Tables 1a and 1b contain information on the 21 states that authorize community notification. Tables 2a and 2b contain information on the 11 states that allow access to sex offender registration information. Each table contains key elements of state laws relating to community notification.

The tables are organized using the categories that are described below. An overview of these categories is provided.

Population Subject to Notification

Many states conduct risk assessment of the likelihood to re-offend as a basis for notification. Other states simply authorize community notification for a category of sex offenders, such as all individuals who commit a certain type of offense or whose victim is under a certain age. Still others allow law enforcement officials to use their discretion in determining who should be subject to notification.

¹⁴ Robin Stanton, “Sexual offender wins halt to alert,” The Herald, Everett, WA, March 29, 1996.

Because notification laws concern offenders who are typically being released from confinement, the question of retroactive application of the law has been an issue in many states. In most states, the population subject to notification are those convicted after the law's effective date. Some states apply their laws retroactively to all appropriate offenders, regardless of adjudication date. The retroactive application in New York, New Jersey, and Alaska has resulted in legal challenges.

In some states, juveniles are also subject to community notification. Minnesota and New Jersey statutes apply to individuals adjudicated delinquent. Washington's statute applies to adult and juvenile offenders. Illinois's statute applies to juveniles convicted of child sexual offenses.

Notification Process

Many approaches are taken to notification. In most states, local law enforcement officials notify the appropriate organizations and individuals. In Louisiana, the offender is required to mail the notification to neighbors and to the superintendent of the school district in which the offender intends to reside, as well as place an ad in a newspaper.

Methods of notification vary from state to state. Typical methods include: press release, flyers distributed throughout neighborhoods, ads in newspapers, and direct mailings to the offender's neighbors.

Information Included

The information released to the public usually includes the offender's name, description or photo, address or approximate address, crime of conviction or description of crime, and age of the victim. Many statutes simply state that agencies are authorized to release relevant and necessary information regarding specific sex offenders. Some statutes have provisions allowing a community guidelines committee, or similar party, to promulgate rules regarding the release of information.

Levels of Risk

Assessment instruments are used in some states to systematically categorize an offender's level of risk to re-offend. These instruments consist of scales which assign point values to various behaviors and past offenses. Offenders scoring a certain point total are subject to community notification. In other states, convictions for specific sexual offenses automatically qualify an offender for notification and, the age of the victim is an automatic qualifier, in still other states.

When Risk is Assessed

Risk is typically assessed either upon conviction in court, or upon release from incarceration.

State and Local Role

The roles of state and local governments vary by jurisdiction. State organizations involved in community notification are often the Department of Corrections, Board of Probation and Parole, Department of Public Safety, and specific Community Notification Guidelines Committees designed solely for the purpose of community notification. Often, the state role consists of maintaining sex offender information in a central registry and disseminating that information to local law enforcement. State organizations often develop rules and procedures for community notification.

Local organizations consist of county sheriffs, police departments, and county courts. These organizations are generally responsible for notifying the public and organizations at risk. In many states, the sex offender registry is available to the public at each county sheriff's office.

The tables for the 11 states allowing access include the following additional categories:

Offenders Subject to Registration

States that allow access to registration information have statutes that require registration for offenders convicted of specific offenses. These offenders become subject to registration upon conviction of a listed offense. In some of these states, juveniles are also required to register.

Registry Type and Information Included

States that maintain registries of sex offenders generally compile information from each county into a central registry. Many other states maintain registration information at a local level, with the county sheriff or local police department. Generally, all information listed in a sex offender registration statement is included in the registry. However, photographs and exact street addresses may be withheld.

Who Has Access

Some states allow any citizen to view sex offender registries, while others only allow access to organizations dealing with children. States may require the citizen or organization seeking information to provide the name or description of the individual for whom information is sought. If a state's sex offender registry is centrally located, an individual must often request information in writing and pay a fee to receive the information.

CONCLUSION

Currently, 32 states have some form of legislation, either authorizing community notification for released sex offenders, or allowing access to sex offender registration information. Many states passed this legislation because of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994. This act requires states to create registries of offenders convicted of crimes against children or sexually violent offenses by 1997, and allows officials to notify the community when a violent offender relocates there.

States With Community Notification Laws

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Arizona	Offenders convicted of: specific, listed offenses on or after June 1, 1996.	Notification given to schools, neighbors and community groups of an offender's release into the community. Methods of notification to be determined by state Community Notification Guidelines Committee.	To be established by the guidelines committee.	Mandatory community notification if an offender is convicted of: sexual conduct with a minor under 15; sexual assault involving the use of a deadly weapon, dangerous instrument, or the intentional infliction of serious injury; or continuous sexual abuse of a child. Discretionary notification if an offender is convicted of: a second or subsequent sexual assault of spouse; sexual abuse of a victim under 15; molestation of a child; commercial sexual exploitation of a minor; or sexual exploitation of a minor.	Upon conviction.
Connecticut	Sex offenders required to register.	Limited public disclosure, when it is deemed necessary to protect a person from a specific sex offender required to register.	Registration information includes name, address, social security number, inmate number, crime of conviction, date and place of conviction, probation termination date, and a complete description of the offender including photograph and fingerprints.	Only those sex offenders who are deemed a threat to public safety by local law enforcement agencies are considered a risk.	Dependent upon individual at risk, but after notification is given by State Board of Parole to local law enforcement.
Delaware	Any offender convicted, before or after statute's effective date, of sexual offense, or violent felony, against a victim under the age of 16.	Community notification to the general public of released sex offender via newspaper publication. Employer or potential employer in a sensitive area dealing with children may inquire as to whether such person's name is on the registration list.	Notice includes: name, release address, offenses for which convicted and statement that victim was a child.	No levels of risk; notification in all cases of sexual offense, or violent felony, against a victim under the age of 16.	Upon conviction.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Florida	Repeat sex offenders and sex offenders who use physical violence. Applies only to offenders convicted after October 1, 1995.	Community notification of release of sex offender via newspaper publication if hearing determines sexual predator poses a threat to society.	Notice includes: name, description (including a photograph), offense and circumstances surrounding conviction, and the ages of the sexual predator's victim(s).	The court shall consider all relevant evidence when assessing the offender's risk, including, but not limited to: the relationship between the sexual predator and the victim; whether the offense involved the use of a weapon or violence, or the threat of violence; prior sexual offenses or violent offenses; evidence that indicates a risk of recidivism; response to treatment; and recent behavior. If the court finds that the sexual predator poses a threat to the public and that notice to the community is necessary, then the court shall submit its finding to the county sheriff.	Following the registration of a sexual predator with the Department of Law Enforcement.
Georgia	Child sex offenders.	Offenders convicted of a listed sex offense to notify superintendent of public school district and sheriff in area of residence as condition of parole. Sheriff to maintain registry of all registered sex offenders in county for inspection by the public.	Notice to include offender's name, address, crime for which convicted, and parole date. Registry includes offender's name and address only.	No levels of risk; statute applies to all child sex offenders.	Upon offense of conviction.
Illinois	Child sex offenders, adult and juvenile, with victims under the age of 18. Applies to offenders convicted before and after statute's effective date (June 1, 1996).	Notification of registered child sex offenders to: The Department of Children and Family Services; school boards of public school districts, the principal of each nonpublic school, and child care facilities located in the county or police district where the offender resides; and, at the department or agency's discretion, any person likely to encounter a child sex offender.	Offender's name, address, offense for which convicted.	No levels of risk; statute applies to all child sex offenders with victims under 18.	Upon receipt of registration information.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Indiana	Sex offenders, convicted after June 30, 1994, with victims under 18.	Statutory notification to all public and nonpublic schools, state agencies licensing or hiring individuals dealing with children, (state personnel department screens individuals who may be hired to work with children) and registered child care facilities.	Local law enforcement registration information includes: name, alias(es), date of birth, sex, race, height, weight, eye color, social security number, driver's license number, home address, identification of offense(s), date of conviction, and sentence imposed. The statewide Sex Offender Registry contains the same information excluding home address.	No levels of risk; statute applies to all convicted sex offenders with victims under 18.	Upon conviction.
Iowa	Sex offenders required to register for a criminal offense against a minor, sexual exploitation, or a sexually violent offense.	Registration information disseminated to criminal justice agencies, government agencies for background checks, the public, with case-specific authorization, when deemed necessary to protect the public, and an individual if specific identifying information is provided about both the person requesting the information and the registrant, along with the reason for requesting the information.	Registration forms include the registrant's name, social security number, current address, and if applicable, the registrant's phone number. Exact information released to the public not specified.	No levels of risk, statute applies to offender's convicted of the following offenses: criminal offense against a minor, sexual exploitation, or a sexually violent offense.	Upon conviction.
Louisiana	Applies to all sex offenders convicted after August 21, 1992, the statute's effective date, and incarcerated sex offenders convicted before effective date, who are eligible for parole after statute's effective date. Additional notification required for offenders with victims under the age of 18.	Mandatory community notification for all convicted sex offenders. Sex offenders required to give notice by mail to at least one person in every residence and business within a one-mile radius in rural area and three square blocks in urban area of offender's residence, and to superintendent of school district who shall notify the principal of relevant schools. Additional community notification via newspaper publication. If the victim is under age 18, notice shall also be given to park, playground and recreational area superintendents within the designated area where the defendant will reside.	Notice to include offender's crime of conviction, name, and address. When victim is under 18, notice to superintendent of school district and superintendent of park, playground, and recreational districts shall include two clear, recent photographs. Also, newspaper notification of an offender whose victim is under 18 to include a photograph.	No levels of risk; statute applies to all convicted sex offenders.	Upon conviction.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Maryland	Child sexual offenders, convicted after October 1, 1995.	The supervision agency, in some instances the courts, must notify the designated law enforcement agency of the child sex offender. The designated law enforcement agency must notify the county superintendent of schools, who must, in turn, notify the school principals. The designated law enforcement agency must also notify the victim, the parents, any witness and any other person the state's attorney may designate in writing. In addition, the designated law enforcement agency may notify local community organizations, religious organizations, and other organizations which relate to children and youth.	Registration information includes: name, address, place of employment; description of the crime, date convicted, jurisdiction of conviction, alias(es) used, social security number, photograph, and fingerprints.	No levels of risk; statute applies to all persons convicted of an offense involving child sexual abuse, and certain specific offenses involving a victim under 15, occurring after October 1, 1995.	Within 5 working days after receiving a registration statement.
Minnesota	Applies to sex offenders who are released, sentenced, or adjudicated delinquent on or after January 1, 1997.	Notification process is dependent upon the offender's assessed level of risk to re-offend: low risk , information maintained within law enforcement agencies and may be disclosed to victims of or witnesses to the offense committed by the offender; moderate risk , law enforcement agencies may disclose information to agencies and groups that the offender is likely to encounter (public and private schools, day care facilities, and other agencies or groups dealing with children or women); high risk , law enforcement agencies also may disclose information to other members of the community whom the offender is likely to encounter.	To be established in the model policy developed by the Peace Officers Standards and Training (POST) Board.	End-of-confinement review committee shall conduct risk assessment and assign offenders to one of three levels: Level I , low risk; Level II , moderate risk; Level III , high risk. Factors relevant to the offender's risk of recidivism include, but are not limited to: the seriousness of the offense should the offender re-offend; the offender's prior offense history; the offender's characteristics (response to prior treatment efforts and history of substance abuse); the availability of community support to the offender (supervision, treatment availability, family and social relationships, lack of education or employment stability); and whether the offender demonstrates a physical condition that minimizes the risk of re-offense.	At least 60 days before released from confinement or accepted for supervision.
Mississippi	Sex offenders required to register. Applies retroactively to offenders convicted before statute's effective date.	Limited public notification dependent upon need to protect. Discretionary case specific authorization to release information to the public.	Relevant and necessary information may be released at discretion of county sheriff.	Guidelines for risk assessment not set. Attorney General to issue guidelines.	Upon receipt of registration information.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Montana	Sex offenders required to register.	Limited notification dependent upon need to protect; a court order allowing the release of registration information must first be obtained. If court order is obtained, possible method of notification may be in the form of a press release.	County sheriff may only release the name of a registered sex offender. If court allows release of information for public protection, the information may include a photograph, approximate address, and other relevant information.	Risk determined by ruling in district court.	Prior to release, upon ruling in district court.
Nevada	All offenders convicted after October 1, 1995, of a sexual offense are subject to risk assessment; notification dependent upon level of risk.	Notification process is dependent upon the assessed level of risk: low risk , law enforcement agencies likely to encounter the sex offender must be notified; moderate risk , schools, religious and youth organizations must also be notified; high risk , the public must be notified through means designed to reach members of the public likely to encounter the offender.	Dependent upon level of risk assessed, to be determined by Attorney General and Advisory Council for Community Notification.	The Attorney General and advisory council must provide for 3 levels of notification depending upon the risk of recidivism: Level I , low risk; Level II , moderate risk; Level III , high risk. Factors relevant to the sex offender's risk of recidivism include, but are not limited to: conditions of release that minimize the risk of recidivism, including probation or parole, counseling, therapy or treatment; advanced age or debilitating illness; and any criminal history indicative of a high risk of recidivism, including repetitive and compulsive behavior, offenses against children, offenses involving the use of weapons, violence or infliction of serious bodily injury, the number, date and nature of prior offenses, behavior while confined, and psychological profiles.	Upon parole.
New Jersey	All sex offenders, released or adjudicated delinquent after October 31, 1994, required to register are subject to risk assessment; notification dependent upon level of risk.	Notification process is dependent upon the degree of danger an offender presents to the community: low risk , notice provided only to victim and law enforcement agencies likely to encounter the offender; moderate risk , notice given to community organizations including schools, religious and youth organizations; high risk , subject to public notification, generally to those community members who are likely to encounter the offender. Only high risk offender notices are open to general public.	In all three levels, the information will include name, description, photograph, address, place of employment or schooling, vehicle description and its license plate number.	Guidelines for community notification established in a 3 level system dependent upon the risk of recidivism: Level I , low risk; Level II , moderate risk; Level III , high risk. Factors relevant to risk of re-offense shall include, but not be limited to, the following: (1) Conditions that minimize risk of re-offense, including whether the offender is under supervision of probation or parole; receiving counseling, therapy or treatment; or residing in a home situation that provides guidance and supervision; (2) Physical conditions that minimize risk of re-offense, including advanced age or debilitating illness; (3) Criminal history factors indicative of high risk of re-offense (outlined in legislation).	Relevant information will be provided to the prosecutor's office at least 90 days prior to the inmate's release. Notification must be implemented within 45 days after receipt of the information.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
New York	All sex offenders subject to registration are subject to risk assessment; amount of notification information dependent upon level of risk assessed.	Notification process is dependent upon the degree of danger an offender presents to the community: low risk , notice to law enforcement; moderate risk , law enforcement may disseminate relevant information to any entity at risk, that entity may disclose information at their discretion; high risk offenders designated as sexually violent predators, registration information available to public upon request in sexually violent predator sub-directory.	Information disclosed dependent upon offender's level of risk. Level I includes only the name of the offender. Level II includes offender's approximate address, photograph, crime of conviction, modus of operation, type of victim targeted and the description of special conditions imposed. Level III also includes offender's exact address. Sub-directory of sexually violent predators also contains photographs of offenders.	The Board assesses the presumptive level of risk through an objective assessment instrument: Level I , low risk; Level II , moderate risk; Level III , high risk. The instrument measures current offense, criminal history, post offense behavior, and planned release environment. It assigns numerical values to each risk factor -- e.g. , 20 points if there were two victims; 30 points if there were three or more victims. The presumptive risk level is calculated by adding the total points in each risk factor. If the score is 70 points or less, the offender is presumptively level I; if more than 70 but less than 110, level II; if 110 or more level III.	60 days prior to discharge, parole or release.
Oregon	Offenders, convicted before and after statute's effective date (September 10, 1993), classified as predatory sex offenders.	Notification process decided by agency supervising sex offender. If offender classified as a predatory sex offender, the agency may release information to the public.	Notice may include: name, address, physical description, type of vehicle driven, any conditions of probation, parole or conditions of release, description of primary and secondary targets and method of offense, current photograph, and probation or parole officer's name or phone number.	The sex offender risk assessment scale approved by the State Department of Corrections may be used to determine whether a person should be classified as a predatory sex offender. The risk assessment scale is composed of two scales: A negative scale, which increases risk; and a positive scale, which reduces risk. The negative scale consists of 24 factors, each with a negative value -- e.g. , -10 points for multiple victims, -10 points for use of weapons. The positive scale consists of 10 factors, each with a positive value -- e.g. , +10 point for successful completion of an approved treatment program. From the point totals of the two scales a level of risk is assessed to the offender: A high level of risk is assessed for a score of -210 to -50; a medium level for a score of -45 to 0; and a low level of risk for a score of +5 to +85. High risk offenders are subject to community notification.	Upon pending release.

Pennsylvania	Sex offenders assessed as sexually violent predators. Statute applies to offenders convicted after statute's effective date (October 24, 1995), and offenders convicted before the statute's effective date that remain under jurisdiction of the Board of Probation and Parole or Department of Corrections.	Community notification regarding sexually violent predators issued as a means of assuring public protection. Sexually violent predator information available to the public upon request.	Notice includes name, address, offense for which convicted, and a statement by the court that the offender is a sexually violent predator.	Risk assessment determines if the sex offender is a sexually violent predator and includes factors such as: age of the offender; prior criminal record; age of the victim; whether there were multiple victims; use of illegal drugs; completion of sentence and participation in programs for sex offenders; mental illness or mental disability; demonstrated pattern of abuse in sexual contact with victim; unusual cruelty displayed; and any behavioral characteristics that contribute to offender's conduct.	No later than 30 days of conviction.
Tennessee	All sex offenders required to register. Statute applies, retroactively, to all convicted offenders.	Notification based on need to protect the public from a specific sex offender.	County sheriff to release relevant and necessary information for a specific sex offender. Exact information to be released determined by sheriff.	Sex offender's level of risk determined by sheriff.	Upon notice of a registration statement.
Texas	Registered offenders who are dispositioned on or after September 1, 1995 for any offense where the victim is a child younger than the age of 17.	Community notification via newspaper publication and notice to superintendent of public schools by mail. Registration information available to the public.	Newspaper publication to include offender's age and gender; a brief description of the offense for which subject to registration; and the municipality, street name, and zip code where the offender intends to reside. Registration information contained in central database is public information, with the exception of offender's photo, social security number, driver's license number, street address and phone number.	No levels of risk; notification in all cases of sex offense against a victim under 17.	Upon conviction occurring on or after September 1, 1995.

State	Population Subject to Notification	Notification Process	Information Included	Levels of Risk	When Risk is Assessed
Washington	Adult and juvenile sex offenders, regardless of conviction date, are subject to risk assessment; notification dependent upon level of risk.	Recommended guidelines for notification are dependent upon the level of risk an offender poses to public safety: low risk (level I), notice to law enforcement agencies; moderate risk (level II), schools and neighborhood groups may also be notified; high risk (level III), the public may be notified through press release.	Most flyers and press releases describe the offender's history and pattern of obtaining access to victims. Public agencies are authorized to release relevant and necessary information regarding sex offenders to the public when release of the information is necessary for public protection.	The End of Sentence Review Committee assesses the offender's future dangerousness, likelihood of re-offending, and threat to the community. Information is sent to local law enforcement agencies which may consider further risk assessment to decide if community notification is appropriate. Local law enforcement agencies then apply the assessment to guidelines to decide upon level of notification: level I , level II , or level III .	Eight months prior to release.

Washington	A statewide End of Sentence Review Committee surveys the records of all sex offenders about to be released from state institutions and determines which offenders pose the greatest risk to the public. The Committee includes representatives from the Department of Corrections, and from the juvenile corrections and mental health divisions of the Department of Social and Health Services. The Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs (WASPC) developed guidelines for notification to be used after the risk assessment has been conducted.	WASPC guidelines recommend that law enforcement agencies use its guidelines for notification. Local law enforcement agencies disseminate information. The most common form of high risk notifications are flyers and press releases. These can be mailed to neighbors, community agencies, schools, media, and other law enforcement agencies. Door-to-door visits and community meetings are also forms of notification.	Washington's community notification law was the first in the country.
